Hello Parents,

It's the first new newsletter of 2019...so exciting!!!

We have had a full week. Productive, but quite full. We started new projects, met our great cadet teacher, added another project and got a heavy load of classwork done across five days!!

The class has done a great job overall. Good work by most, and some amazing creativity by several.

We've trudged through two chapters of Call of the Wild. It's a tough read, we listen to it read aloud, but still wew stop and discuss, grab tissues, or just take breaks. I hope that the Purdue Convocation is well done.

We are getting rolling with this spring semester. A little slow to get everything started, but I have a good list of projects coming soon that should keep students interested, excited and busy! Already I have several enjoying the TinkerCAD mashups...maybe a little too much. Strangely I have a handful of students that took an interest in conditional formatting in spreadsheets...specifically Google Sheets. At least three students today have been developing their own check-in sheets using color coding based on data entry. Sometimes I really am amazed by these students!!

The snow is coming, the snow is coming!! Well, they say the snow is coming....but I'll believe the hype when it's actually here. Do remember to keep an eye on WLFI for school alerts, make sure your skyalert has your current cell phone or email. Also, no snow dancing aloud by any student!! We can enjoy a two hour delay, but snow days must be made up. If we do have any upcoming snow days...remember that your student probably has at least 3-5 assignments that they can complete online. It's not an E-Learning day, but there is work they can do...if you need them to do something productive?!

Have a great weekend!!
