Hello Parents!!

A short week that was shortened even more with delays...uuuggggghhhh!!! This week was tough to get done with some of the things Ms. Mann and I really wanted to accomplish. Several of the project ideas and plans had to be pushed off to next week, just so that graded work could have the time to get done. I guess I often forget that, that is how January and February often work. You get done what you can, and hope for the fewest disruptions in the school day or week.

With high hopes, next week should be a great week. We have several things planned, and a new balance on the workload to help manage time. Some students are still struggling to get their work completed in the class time. This is due to many factors...mostly distractions. Sometimes it's just hard to work with so many interesting things going on.

Our class was very excited to be the highest reading winner for third grade and to have a classmate that was the highest for the grade level. That's pretty impressive stuff. Thank you to all that supported reading at home and helped record the thousands of pages.

I hope that everyone has a warm and safe weekend. There might be just enough snow out there for sledding....just be careful on the hills!! Have a great weekend!!
