Hello Parents,

A full week done. Two weeks in the books for this final nine week grading period...seven weeks left?! It just doesn't seem real. It's too quick.

We have good things next week. New writing work, new projects, new 3D printing, possibly new MinecraftEDU project and more. It will be a busy week, but hopefully one that will hold the interest of the students and maybe even be a bit fun. This week's project work with writing a mini hypothesis and designing and launching straw rockets was quite the fun time!!

We are going to hopefully see nicer weather across the next weeks. Please do still make sure your child has layers...even if they choose shorts, there is always a worry if the temperatures don't quite get above 60 about the students in shorts.

With just over seven weeks (seven weeks and 3 days) PLEASE make sure you are encouraging you student to get those book projects done. We just finished a read aloud Gansta Granny and that would be a beautiful project. Please help your student keep their eye on getting the work done sooner rather than later. No one wants a rough end to this year.

Have a great weekend. I know I'm ready to cheer on Purdue and hope for a final four chance for the Boilermakers!!
