Hello Parents,

My goodness!! The time is flying. I cannot believe that tomorrow is eight days to the end... :-(We are wrapping up some workbooks. We need to wrap up ThatQuiz quizzes for report cards. Some students really need to get book projects done. We are approaching the end. The end of grading, the end of quizzes, the end of the year.

It's funny, but attending Purdue graduation and seeing the graduate students and hearing from their professors isn't so different from the end of the school year. There is an intellectual vacuum that occurs. You go from the point of busy and stressed to nothing. This is the future of many students. To this I propose that I will share resources...some online and some printable to share and use this summer.

Please keep your kids reading. I have a site that is similar to the Reading Counts program at Happy Hollow that I will be setting students up with accounts for the summer. This is a GREAT way to push and encourage the reading. Use it to offer challenges, goals, rewards, etc. I won't promise to monitor everyday...but this is something that i know could help push the reading with some of this year's class.

The adventures continue...don't stop checking:
